But

I had no idea until the other day that hitting the pipe was ever practiced among the upper ten in London. How I came to find it out was through talking to an old globe trotter like myself at the club the other evening with reference to she looks of young Lord A., a young man who recently came into his title and vast estates.

"He looks as if he had been hitting the pipe," said I; "but I suppose that is an un-known vice in London."

"Far from it," was the reply. "They not only that the pipe, but do it in a style I can only characterize as regal. Within the last few years drinking has been voted bad form with a certain set, but as a set-off they have gone in for hitting the pipe. They keep it very quiet, but the scorecy of the thing adds to the zest. Stolen pleasures, you know. The swellest joint in the world was opened about a month ago not two miles opened about a month ago not two miles from where we are now. glass and of cupola form.

It was really like a large greenhouse and was full of plants of all descriptions and the air was heavy with an indescribably sensuous ador. From the hall we were conducted by one of the East Indians to an inner room, gorgeously turnished, but at the same time not gaudily, and off this were small cabinets, reminding me of the dressing rooms of a Turkish bath. These, Lord A. explained were private rooms where any smoker who so desired it could have complete privacy. I saw the doors of two only closed and pre-

The ladies were one and all beautifully dressed and many of them were resplendant in jewels. Among them I was astonished to see a well-known Countess and a society beauty, about the last person in the world I should have suspected of 'hitting the pipe.' Among the men also I saw several whom I recognized and one I knew well, who seemed as much astonished to see me as I was to see him. This room was superbly furnished in Persian. Lord A. and I were conducted by the same Oriental as had conducted us through the rooms to two settees lying alongside of each other, and he then brought us the usual 'iay out' of pipe, and bowl, and brazier, with the lit-tle pea-like balls of opium. I was far too for the pipe, but I made a semblance of smoking so as not to attract too much attention. Lord A., on the other hand, was soon hard at work, and in a very short time the look in his eyes told me that his thoughts were far away from the queer scenes around him. I was struck by one beautiful girl lying right opposite. She couldn't have been more than 20, if she were that, who was in full evanion down in the hand into a second or the second of the of plus on the sum of the sum of

THE CONVENTION OF TURNER SOCIETIES.

This Numerous and Thrifty Organize

NEW YORK, June 22 .- The fourteenth annual convention of the North American Turner Bunds met this morning in Central Turn Hall and began formal business. William Pfafender, of New Ulm, Minn., was temporary Chairman and the Secretary pro tem was Victor L. Berger, of Milwau-kee. The committee reported that 724 dele-gates, representing 36 States and districts, had handed in their credentials. President Hugo Muench delivered the opening address. He congratulated the organization on its rapid growth. They controlled a greater social and political power he said than any other organization in the United States. No other civil body had furnished so many able-bodied soldiers, during the late war. The work of organizing the convention was then entered into. Chicago leads in the number of votes, having 102 of

IMPORTANT ANNOUNCEMENT NEW STORY

> -BY-WILLIAM BLACK.

A NEWSPAPER NOVEL DEALING WITH COTEMPORARY LIFE, NEVER BEFORE PUBLISHED.

Specially Secured for the Columns of THE DISPATCH.

We have pleasure in announcing to our readers that we have secured for publication in the olumns of THE DISPATCH a new work of fiction by Mr. William Black-an author universally admired-his forthcoming work being, noreover, specially written for newspaper publication and designed to interest all classes. The story is altogether new and unpublished and as it deals to some extent with present day events and characters, its publication from week to week will arouse the utmost attention.

WILLIAM BLACK'S

NEW NOVEL WILL BE ENTITLED "STAND FAST.

CRAIG-ROYSTON. And the story it will tell will be as unconven tional as the title of the work. "Stand Fast, Craig-Royston," is the family motto of one of the characters introduced by the author-and a very interesting, original and breezy sort of individual he proves himself to be. But his greatest claim upon the reader lies in the fact that his daughter is the heroine of the story. Willlam Black's heroines are among the most delightful creations in our literature, and the heroine of the present story is equal to the best

THE AUTHOR OF "STAND FAST,

Mr. WILLIAM BLACK Mr. WILLIAM BLACK, the author of "A Princess of Thule," "Sunrise," etc., was born a little short of 50 years ago, in Glasgow. His youthful ambition was to become an artist, but eventually he drifted into journalism, of which he may still be considered a distinguished and successful representative. He located himself in London in 1864. As a newspaper representa-tive he went through the Prussia-Austrian War of 1866. "In Silk Attire." produced in 1869. dealt with peasant life in the Black Forest. "Kil-meny," "The Monarch of Mineing Lane" and "A Daughter of Heth," followed in the order named and ran through many editions. Next came "The Strange Adventures of a Phaeton," which literally described a driving excursion the thread of fiction interwoven. It is said that a good many people, Americans chiefly, have adopted this plan of exploring the English counties, and have taken these "Adventures" as a sort of guide book. A glande through the as a sort of guide book. A giance through the author's list of published works reveals that his later stories appeared in the following sequence: "A Princess of Thule," "The Maid of Kileena," "Three Feathers," "Madcap Violet," "Green Pastures and Piccadilly," "Macleod of Dare," White Wings: A Yachting Romance," "Sur rise: A Story of the Times," "That Beautiful Wretch," "Shandon Bells," "White Heather," "The Wise Women of Iverness," "Sabina Zembra," "In Far Lochaber."

same gifted source. POINTS OF THE NEW SERIAL, Publication of which begins in THE DISPATCH

-ON-

SUNDAY, JULY 6, 1890. The heroine is a young American girl of Scotch descent, who has traveled much and who has a charming simplicity and independence of The story is full of interest and the move ment is steady and continuous. The perusal of the opening chapters gives promise of some surprising situations in the near future. The hero is a young fellow of means, with brilliant prespects in the political world; his father is a millionaire with socialistic theories.

The love story which the author has to tell is of a most original kind, and requires for its elaboration several interesting personages, in-cluding a family of Americans and several fashionable notabilities in London. The political characters introduced can almost be recognized as counterparts of people now living. We have copious references in the mouth of an old Scotch poet to the claims of Scotland in song and story, and as a back-ground we have fashionable life in Mayfair, at

Henley and Brighton, labor and co-operative congresses in various parts of the country, and a characteristic leader of the masses in a North Country man named Ogden. "Stand

LONDON, June 15 .- It was but a few years ago that opium smoking in London was a vice known only to the very few in the West End, or to the lowest slums of Ratcliffe highway or Whitechapel in the East End. People read about it and talked about it, but few practiced it, and those who took the drug at all took it in pills, and did not "hit the pipe." But within the last few years this has all changed, and not only have opium joints increased in the East End, but the peruicious habit has taken root in the aristocratic quarters of the West End, and, judging from what I saw the other evening, it will have taken such a hold upon its votaries that all the crusades in the world will fail to much more than mitigate the evil. They say that once an

A REGAL OPIUM JOINT.

"I certainly will," I replied, Shortly afterward I found myself in conversation with young Lord A. There is a peculiar freemasoury among opium smokers all the world over, and although personally I have not "hit the pipe" half a dozen times in my life, and dislike it rather than otherwise, I knew enough of the shibboleth to ingratiate myself in a very short time with the young Lord and led him to infer that I was even a

LIKE A GREAT GREENHOUSE. The pressing of the button was followed by the door swinging slowly open, and we by the door swinging slowly open, and we found ourselves in a small hallway with another door barring our progress. Lord A. pressed a second button and this door also swing open, and we were admitted to the club proper. Here we found three East Indians, dressed in flowing Oriental robes, with gold embroidered turbans, and who had been summoned by the ringing of the bell at the outer gate. They bent low as they salaamed and removed our hats and sumed that those were the only ones occupied. When in this room I heard sound came from, and I soon found myself

ALL PROMINENT PEOPLE. There was hardly any, if a single man or woman, in that room who was not wellknown in society, and my eyes were indeed opened to the spread of opium smoking in London. When we had been there nearly an hour, and I was beginning insensibly to an hour, and I was beginning insensity to dose; off, I was roused by the low tones of an organ exquisitely softly played. The player, whoever he or she was, for I could not see either organ or player, used the vox humana stop with telling effect. The organist began with a gentle lullaby and then broke off into that exquisite air on the organ, "The Rose That Blooms so Soitly." This had the effect of silencing all conversation and had the further effect of sending looking round I found we were almost the sole occupants of the room.
